International Association for Suicide Prevention

1960 - 2010

The International Association for Suicide Prevention (IASP) is a non-profit organisation for those interested and working in the field of suicide prevention.

The membership consists of individuals (clinicians, scientists, crisis workers and volunteers, persons who have lost a family member by suicide) and community, national and international organisations.

At this moment, the membership extends over 50 countries and is affiliated with the World Health Organisation as the key organisation concerned with suicide prevention.

Journal

- We publish the journal CRISIS, which serves as a medium for international exchange of experience and research on the topics of suicide prevention and crisis intervention.

Task Forces

- We convene task forces composed of our community of members, researchers, professionals, lay people and volunteers who focus deeply on a specific aspect of suicide and suicide prevention, including topical issues such as:

Defense and Police Personnel

Task Force is dedicated to improving the international collaboration necessary to reduce suicide amongst Defense and Police personnel.

Emergency Medicine and Suicidal Behavior

This Task Force has been created to improve research and practice linkages between experts in suicide, psychiatry, and emergency medicine.

Genetics and Neurobiology of Suicide (The)

This task force evolved from the 'genetics' task force, and now aims to bring together suicidologists with a clear interest in neurobiological aspects of suicidal behaviour and to stimulate research in this domain.

Helplines Best Practices

This Task Force is committed to developing a commonly agreed set of standards for Helpline work on an international level.

National Systems for Certifying Suicidal Deaths

This Task Force was established to best explain how suicides are tabulated in national database/vital registry systems.

Postvention (Suicide Bereavement)

This Task Force focuses on suicide bereavement and the survivors of suicide.

Suicide and the Media

This Task Force establishes guidelines that promote the accurate, responsible and ethical reporting of suicide in the media.

Suicide in Prisons

This Task Force is created to bring together the available knowledge and expertise on suicidal behaviour in prisons in order to facilitate the wider dissemination of the fundamentals of effective suicide prevention in prisons.

Suicide in the Elderly

This Task Force is established to increase awareness and understanding about suicide in the elderly.

World Suicide Prevention Day

- We organize and promote World Suicide Prevention Day on the 10th of September of each year.

World Suicide Prevention Day 2009 activities in India, Fiji and Switzerland

Last year's World Suicide Prevention Day involved thousands of participants in hundreds of locations in over 40 countries around the world.

Web Presence

- We provide information about suicide and its prevention to the membership and to the public through our website at www.iasp.info. In addition, we have a very active Facebook Fan page with over 3,800 Fans.

IASP Structure

The Executive board of the IASP is elected each two years and at present includes:
